

THE PANORAMIC BOUDOIR
by Oitoempono

Founded in 1993, Porto-based Oitoempono brings together the French touch of Jacques Bec and the daring Portuguese vision of Artur Miranda. Working on projects in Lisbon, London, Paris and Sao Paulo, its work pays tribute to the skills of Portuguese craftsmen and mixes furniture by the leading designers of the 1940s to 1970s with Oitoempono-designed creations.

For its third participation in AD Interieurs, it imagines Dutch exotic dancer and spy Mata Hari's boudoir that's full of glamour and vintage furniture. Wrapping the entire room, the handmade, textured De Gournay Namban panoramic wallpaper with touches of gold leaf depicting cranes in flight mixes a Japanese and Art Deco spirit, matched with a black Tai Ping carpet resembling strands of hair mixed with gold thread – aptly named Mata Hari's Hair.

The collective says: "We love mixing styles; our approach is transversal. We combine elements from different periods and designs, for example from Egyptian art through to 18th-century and contemporary art or furniture. We trust in the art of living, comfort and a made-to-measure lifestyle!"
