Scenes from this year's Gay Pride March in London

Summer in the city

THIS year's Lesbian and Gay Pride March in London was bathed in sunshine as over 1,000 people walked through the streets from Hyde Park to the University of London at Malet Street.

The event was earlier threatened by lack of organisation - and some feared that the annual march would be a dismal failure. But a last-minute effort by hundreds of gay men and lesbians ensured that tradition was kept.

In Edinburgh, the Scottish Homosexual Rights Group organised a full day of events on Saturday June 23. For the first time in ten years there were lesbian and gay speakers at the Mound - a public forum usually the preserve of political and religious groups.

Back in London, another group of gay public speakers were confronting prejudice at Hyde Park's Speakers' Corner.

Hyde Park Gays, who stand on their soap boxes every Sunday, took full advantage of the warm sunshine to deliver their message to hundreds of Hyde Park visitors.
