Fairy tale writing (with a twist!)

Remember the fairy tale, Little Red Riding Hood? The passages below are all different and unusual ways of introducing this well-known fairy tale. Choose one of the beginnings and continue the rest of the story of Little Red Riding Hood in the same style.

Opening the story....

Once upon a time, there lived a sweet young girl called Red Riding Hood. She was called this because of the red cape and hood that she always wore...

Once upon a time, there lived a sweet young Wolf named Bob. He was not like other wolves; vicious and blood thirsty. This wolf was peace loving, and a vegetarian. One day...

... So there I was, minding my own business, when I saw that little thug, Red Riding Hood. She was wearing an evil grin and I could see a nasty glint in her eye...

There I was, a sweet, innocent wolf, being shot at by the wood cutter. How did this happen? I hear you ask. Well, I'll tell you. But be warned – this isn't the story of Red Riding Hood you've been told. Oh no. This one is a lot more blood thirsty...

Bang! Another enormous wallop with a left hook! Pow! An upper cut, landing right on my snout, which had only just recovered from the beating I got last week from the Three Little Pigs. I staggered backwards and covered behind a bush as Red Riding Hood took another swing at me. How did I land up in this situation, and where was the sweet little girl I had been promised for my tea?

It all started when...