Friday News

Another Friday has come around and it feels like the weeks are drawing in as quickly as the evenings! With the activities going on in school there has been a great buzz about learning and certainly a lot to celebrate.

It was great to see the Junior children out blackberry picking last week to gather ingredients for their cookery lesson the following day and then yesterday they were outside in the wind (which Mr Bromley tells me he ordered) testing their kites – another 2 things ticked off our 20 things to do before half term. I'm sure you've see the trikes in the Infant playground; I can assure you that the Infant children (and some juniors) have been making great use of them. It's brilliant to see that our mud kitchen is being used by the Infants on a daily basis – I'm sure their clothes tell the same story! The artwork which has been coming from the Infants recently has been impressive and certainly demonstrates the quality of teaching and learning.

One of the activities which we would love you to get involved in is extreme reading. In our library we have a display board promoting reading in extreme places such as the top of a fell or buried in sand. If you could take a picture of your child reading in an unusual place we'll happily display it with the others. We have a reward for each picture you bring in!

Our website is updated weekly with details of events, work in school and other information however we also have a twitter account @bromoor and an instagram account bromoorcumbria where we post pictures as they're happening or to celebrate our children's learning for you to follow if you have these social media platforms.
