

Describing settings:

In English, we are currently looking at setting descriptions using a range of descriptive words and devices.

Over half-term, your task is to describe somewhere that you have been (but do not tell us where). From your description, we will try to work out where you have visited.

When describing the place, think about what you can see, hear or smell. What was the atmosphere or mood like?

Please complete in your English homework book.

Good luck and have a great half-term.

Example:

This building, which used to be a bustling depot for the most iconic locomotives and engineering brilliance, was transformed over 30 years ago into the popular tourist attraction it is today. When you enter the building, you can smell the grease and smoke that have saturated the walls throughout the years. Although it is no longer used to store, repair or build engines, you can still see the shiny steel girders that hauled the engines onto the rails. Over the excited cried of adults and children alike, you can sometimes hear the shrill of a whistle or the chuffing of an engine being manoeuvred into position.

National Railway Museum – York