The Jungle Book- a retelling

It was 7:00 of a very warm evening in the Seonee hills when Father Wolf woke up from his day rest he was starting to scratch himself, stretching, yawning and spreading his paws on after the another. Mother Wolf lay with her great, grey nose which dropped on the little, white squealing cubs. A moment later, the Jackal walked slowly into the cave but Father Wolf was not happy to see him in his gigantic, gloomy cave and gave the baby wolves a blessing. "What are you doing in my cave?" questioned Father Wolf belligerently. The Jackal never answered but no-one knew why and he ran back out of the cave.

Later that day, Tabaqui ran into the cave and distracted Father Wolf. "Sorry Father Wolf Shere Khan is hunting for all the other animals."

"That is breaking the law!"

"Bu..."

"We need to ascertain and fast."

"I really think Shere Khan is stupid because he's hunting other animals and also making loads of noises which are absentminding me." Asked Father Wolf.

"Why would he hunt for other poor animals?"

"I don't either but we need to find out."

In the middle of the jungle, all the other animals told each other that there is a man cub and it is not fair to touch him because he is weak. Mother Wolf told everyone that Shere Khan nearly caught him,

"He was so close of getting bombarded, by the horrible, terrible, monstrous Shere Khan." Asked Mother Wolf.
