The Jungle Book- a retelling

The Jackal.

It was 7 o'clock and father wolf (who always went out to hunt) woke up and started to do his stretches ready to violently kill some animals for their meal. As he was preparing for his big hunt, a Jackal approached the wolfs threshold and said kindly " I bless your children and your caring wife."

News of Shere Khan.

As the hours went on, busy father wolf was speaking to the dirty Jackal nicely- even though he didn't like him- and then as the Jackal noticed something valuable to him he gallaped towards the deliciously left over bone at the back of the dull cave with no furniture in it, not even soft animal fur, just bare old and hard cave floor. After the Jackal had finished his meal he compliments his hyperactive and beguiling children (born 2 years ago.) The Jackal tells father wolf to beware of Shere Khan (The belligerent maniac that likes killing humans and mostly animals) is hunting on their hillside -seeonee hill- and he could be anywhere!
